LOEFFLER MURDERED.

Old Watchman Found Dead in Herde's Candy Factory.

Face Cut and a Bag Drawn Over

One Man Arrested, but His Name Is Kept Secret.

What the police of the Leonard street station believe to be an atroclous murder, was committed some time last night in Henry Heide's big candy manufactory, at 183 Franklin street.

The victim is August Loeffler, the oldinght watchman, who has been employed there for the last five years. The body of the old man was found early this morning bying in a room in the basement near the Franklin street end of the building.

He was stretched out on his back just at the entrance of the store room. A pool of blood surrounded his head and his face was terribly mutilated.

His body was cold, and he had evidently been dead for some time.

Loeffler was sixty-three years old and a widower. His residence is given at 610 was his murderer is still a mystery.

The appailing discovery was made by Frederick Rebmann, the engine-room, which his located in the basement, at the Harrison street end of the building, went up towards the Franklin street side to get some by Frederick Rebmann, the engine-room, which his located in the basement, at the Harrison street end of the building, went up towards the Franklin street side to get some large from the store-room, which his located in the basement, at the Harrison street of the building, went up towards the Franklin street side to get some large from the store-room, which his located in the basement, at the Harrison street end of the building, went up towards the Franklin street side to get some large from the store-room, but both of these stories found a piece of sacking was lying over the dead man's head. The police were very reticent about the case. Inspector McAvoy and Inspector McLaughin, the Chief of the Detective Bureau, with several of his men came down to the Leonard street station to assist in the investigation.

Engineer Rebmann and the fireman were detained at the station all the morning, and were with the police officials in Capt. Deherty's private room until noon, undergoing a most searching examination.

They refused to give out any information until they had completed their investigation. All that Inspector McLaughlin would say was that there was clear evidence that a murder had been committed.

A couple of policemen were sent to

"The facts are these: Loeffler's body was found at 6 o'clock this morning by Engineer Rebmann.

"He was lying on his back in the basement about fifteen feet from the windows on the Franklin street side, with both arms extended.

"A burlap bag was drawn over bis bead as far as his shoulders.

"A white handkerchief was tied over his eyes. There were two knife cuts not very deep on the chin, one on the left upper lip and one on the forehead. There was a fracture of the temple on the left side.

"There was nothing to indicate from the surroundings that there had been any struggle or fight. Loeffler carried no pistol or club."

Inspector McLaughlin refused to state when the suspect he had in custody had been arrested or where he was contined. All the police officials are maintaining an air of great mystery about the case.

There is a report that a policeman brought into the Leonard street station an axe all stailed with blood.

Inspector McLaughlin refused to state whether such a weapon had been brought in or not.

Miss Hamilton accepted the invitation expecting to return to New York early in the evening.

At 11.30 she started for the bridge along John street. When at Jay street she was stopped by two men. The taller man caught her around the waist and lifted her off the ground, and Miss Hamilton screamed for help as loudly as she could. One of the men tried to stuff a red bandana handkerchief into her mouth. The young girl struggled flercely, and she kicked and clawed at the faces of her assailants until the man holding her threw her bodilly down a near-by cellar. By this time the watchmen of Arbuckle's and the coal-yards, who had heard the girl's screams, arrived at the spot and ordered the ruffans to desist. The brutes showed fight, until one of the watchmen drew his revolver and fired three shots into the air.

Then the thugs ran up Jay street in time to escape Policeman Dean, who had heard the three shots.
